Why Professor Langley Didn't Go To Harvard.

Professor Langley was born at Roxbury (now Boston). August 22, 1834. Like many another Boston boy, he was sent to the Boston Latin school, where Latin and Greek and little else was But the sun came up, and the sun shone taught.

Latin and Greek was reputed to be the sum and end of learning, and Har-vard college seemed to show dim perspectives of more Latin and Greek. was no wonder that young Langley, whose genius lay in quite another di-rection, should look about him, after his graduation from the school, to see f there were not some practical way in which he could pursue those me chanical and astronomical studies that already had fascinated him. He had ittle inclination to enter college, and the openings in astronomy proper were rare in those years, even rarer than now. Since he was ten years old, he had been reading and studying astronomy, making small telescopes, using these and others, with various success, but always with ardor. The practical question of how to shape his ife was one that he had solved, and a variety of causes led to his determination not to go to college, but to become a civil engineer. Here at least was a profession whose basis was mathematical, and in which mechanical tastes and acquirements would have scope So the practice of engineering was begun; special circumstances forced him architecture, and for some years this was his pursuit. These were dull years, mostly spent in the West, where at that time there were few opportunities to display any real ability in this special calling.—Professor E. #### American Moths.

A bird's-eye view of our continent hows us the elevations of the Rocky Mountains and parallel spurs in the West, and the Alleghanies in the East. Mountain-ranges stand in the way of the spreading of moths, which perish in the cold atmosphere and the storms which gather about the rocky summits. Our faunce can be understood by studying the formation of the land in this way. Over the vast plain east of Colorado the same kinds of moths generally prevail. The valleys in the West, other hand, contain a majority of peculiar species or kinds, often more local in the East. In New York we are cut off, again, by the Alleghanies from many species which are plentiful in Ohio and Indiana. Our tropical wanderers come to us up along the coast. I have met, sailing on the Guif stream, flights of moths, mostly of a few kinds, which fell on the rigging and sides of the vessels in great numbers. In the autumn, on Staten Island, I have captured specimens whose true home was Cuba and Jamaica. Although small fauna, or simits of particular species, are traged by naturalists, our mountain-ranges are the best general guide as to the changes in the sorts of moths which we may expect. From Ohio to Louisiana we meet much the same kinds of moths, with a difference in the rarity of certain species, and in the presence of others dependent on particular kinds of plants. But, when we get into the valleys of the Rocky Mountains, we shall have taken leave of the most of our dusty-winged eastern friends. Some kinds take the voyage with us completely across the continent, but these are comparatively few in number, and are sometimes almost cosmo-

Messis. C. I. Hood & Co.: Gentlemen—My little girl had the diphtheria last April.
The disease left her very weak, blood poor, with no appetite, and she could not seem to rally from its effects. Hood's SarsararilLA was recommended by a neighbor. After she had been taking it a few days we noticed a change for the better—she began to eat with a relish. It seemed to take out the poison the disease had left in her blood, the change being very noticeable in her face.
She took it two months and fully regained her health, much to our delight. We now recommend Hood's Sarsararilla with a great deal of pleasure. Very truly yours,
